How it is being used

- “NCA’s CYBER CHOICES preventative diversion programme. This involves a process of identifying ‘at-risk’ young people, selected based on demographic risk and patterns of behaviour detected by surveillance; in this case, on the basis of online activity which indicates a potential interest in cybercrime forums or the purchase of cybercrime tools. These interventions target people before they engage in serious illegal activity based on a set of risk characteristics”

- “VRUs appear to use a comprehensive data strategy in much the same manner as the NCA, blending operational data, commercial data, and research data into high-level and local dashboards for operational targeting, then feeding into sophisticated targeted marketing campaigns.”

What are the current protections?

- https://www.thedrum.com/news/2022/03/02/biden-calls-end-targeted-advertising-kids-the-industry-reacts
- Behavioural advertising is banned, but why aren't targeted ads and content?
- "1998 Children's Online Privacy Protection Act (COPPA) essentially bans behavioral advertising, user profiling and retargeting on apps and websites designed for children ages 13 and under."

Is targeted advertising working?

- “Findings include the fact that low-income children exposed to a commercial just once had favorable attitudes towards the advertised product. Furthermore, these authors found that exposure to television ads among 5- and 6-year-old children directly influenced breakfast food and snack preferences. Finally, exposure to advertisements has also been shown to influence the frequency of snacking among children.”

Should children still be exposed to ads?
